

Competency Based Nursing Education National Network

Greetings!

Thank you to all who were able to attend the CBNE National Network meeting held on Wednesday May 10th. The meeting was attended by about 60 nurse educators and featured reports on competency-based education initiatives currently taking place within our regional workgroups. Members who were unable to attend the meeting may access a recording using the following link:

I was happy to serve as the featured speaker this month and excited to share news of Rutgers University School of Nursing's efforts to integrate simulation across the curriculum. Our school's effort was guided using the AACN's Essentials framework and the NLN/Jeffries Simulation Theory. I am attaching the slides from the presentation in case anyone wants them. I would love to hear more about how other schools are viewing simulation as both a mechanism for competency-based education and potential avenue for assessing competency.

Our website has been generating traffic. I continue to receive requests from educators across the country asking to be added to our contact lists. If you haven't yet, you can visit the site at www.cbne.org. I welcome suggestions about content you might want to find there, so feel free to send your ideas to info@cbne.org. We have also begun transitioning our organizational structure from a regional to a project-based one. While there are a few initiatives that are ongoing, generating new ideas for scholarly work will now be possible through our Special Interest Groups (SIGs). We have listed multiple choices for the SIGs and I hope you all will consider joining one. If you don't see something that interests you, there is also a form you can submit to suggest a SIG that you'd like to start.

The next national meeting is scheduled for July 12th at 7pm EST. A meeting link will be sent approximately two weeks prior to the event. Thank you all for your continued efforts in advancing this important work!
